Read the passage below:

Maya stood at the edge of the community garden, surveying the overgrown weeds and broken fence. While others had given up on the neglected space, she saw potential. Every Saturday for three months, she arrived at dawn with her tools, working steadily until the sun hung high overhead. When younger children from the neighbourhood wandered by, she'd patiently teach them about composting and planting, even when they accidentally trampled her seedlings. She never complained when the council delayed approving her request for new fencing, instead using recycled materials to create a temporary solution. By spring, the garden bloomed with vegetables that Maya distributed freely to elderly neighbours who struggled to afford fresh produce.
